W h e n they diverge conflict arises and the crises that torture the m i n d and spirit.

We see from the period of the Rig Veda hymns onwards the development of both these streams of life a n d thought. T h e early ones are full of the external world, of the beauty a n d mystery of nature, of joy in life and an overflowing vitality. T h e gods and goddesses, like those of Olympus, are very h u m a n ; they are supposed to come down and mix with men and women; there is no hard and fast line dividing the two. T h e n thought comes and the spirit of inquiry and the mystery of a transcendental world deepens. Life still continues in a b u n d a n t measure, b u t there is also a turning away from its outward manifestations a n d a spirit of detachment grows as the eyes are turned to things invisible, which cannot be seen or heard or felt in the ordinary way. W h a t is the object of it all ? Is there a purpose in the universe? And, if so, how can man's life be put in harmony with i t ? Can we bring about a harmonious relation between the visible and invisible worlds, and thus find out the right conduct of life? So we find in India, as elsewhere, these two streams of thought
