and not the religious one. I like the vigour of the thought, the questioning, the rationalistic background. T h e form is terse, often of question and answer between pupil and teacher, and it has been suggested that the Upanishads were some kind of Iccture notes made by the teacher or taken down by his disciples. Professor F. W. Thomas in ' T h e Legacy of India' says: 'What gives to the Upanishads their unique quality and unfailing human appeal is an earnest sincerity of tone, as of friends conferring upon matters of deep concern.' And C. Rajagopalachart thus eloquently speaks of them: ' T h e spacious imagination, the majestic sweep of thought, a n d the almost reckless spirit of exploration with which, urged by the compelling thirst for truth, the Upanishad teachers and pupils dig into the " o p e n secret" of the universe, make this most ancient of the world's holy books still the most modern and most satisfying.'

T h e dominating characteristic of the Upanishads is the dependence on truth. 'Truth wins ever, not falsehood. With t r u t h is paved the road to the Divine.' And the famous invocation is for light and understanding: 'Lead me from the unreal to the real! Lead me from darkness to light! Lead me from death to immor-
