Again and again the restless mind peeps out, ever seeking, ever questioning: 'At whose behest doth mind light on its perch? At whose command doth life, the first, proceed? At whose behest do men send forth this speech? What god, indeed, directed eye and ear?' And again: 'Why cannot the wind remain still? W h y has the h u m a n mind no rest? Why, and in search of what, does the water run out and cannot stop its flow even for a m o m e n t ? ' It is the adventure of m a n that is continually calling and there is no resting on the way and no end of the journey. In the Aitereya Brahmana there is a hymn about this long endless journey which we must undertake, a n d every verse ends with the refrain: Charaiveti, charaiveti—'Hence, O traveller, march along, march along!' There is no humility about all this quest, the humility before an all-powerful deity, so often associated with religion. It is the triumph of mind over the environment. 'My body will be reduced to ashes and my breath will join the restless and deathless air, but not I a n d my deeds. O mind, remember this always, remember this.' In a morning prayer the sun is addressed thus: 'O sun
