will continue to remain the mysterious, and life with all its changes will still remain a bundle of good a n d evil, a succession of conflicts, a curious combination of incompatible a n d mutually hostile urges.

Or again, perhaps, the very progress of science, unconnected with and isolated from moral discipline and ethical considerations, will lead to the concentration of power a n d the terrible instruments of destruction which it has made, in the hands of evil and selfish men, seeking the domination of others—and thus to the destruction of its own great achievements. Something of this kind we see happening now, and behind this war there lies this internal conflict of the spirit of man.

How amazing is this spirit of m a n ! In spite of innumerable failings, m a n , throughout the ages, has sacrificed his life a n d all he held dear for an ideal, for truth, for faith, for country and honour. T h a t ideal may change, but that capacity for self-sacrifice continues, and, because of that, much may be forgiven to man, and it is impossible to lose hope for him. In the midst of disaster, he has not lost his dignity or his faith in the values he cherished. Plaything of nature's mighty forces, less than a
