other. Before the second of these was over, K a m a l a lay dying. When I was arrested in February, 1934, on a Calcutta warrant, K a m a l a went up to our rooms to collect some clothes for me. I followed her to say good-bye to her. Suddenly she clung to me and, fainting, collapsed. This was unusual for her as we h a d trained ourselves to take this jail-going lightly a n d cheerfully a n d to make as little fuss about it as possible. Was it some premonition she had that this was our last more or less normal meeting? T w o long prison terms of two years each h a d come between me and her just when our need for each other was greatest, just when we h a d come so near to each other. I thought of this during the long days in jail, a n d yet I hoped that the time would surely come when we would be together again. How did she fare during these years ? I can guess but even I do not know, for during jail interviews, or during a brief interval outside there was little normality. We h a d to be always on our best behaviour lest we might cause pain to the other by showing our own distress. But it was obvious that she was greatly troubled and distressed over m a n y things and there was no peace in her mind. I might have been of some help, but not from jail.
