boy—had been m u c h better than K a m a l a and was even allowed to go out for walks. We tried to keep the news of his sudden death from her, but we did not succeed. Those who are ill, and especially those who have the misfortune to stay in a sanatorium, seem to develop a sixth sense which tells them much that is sought to be hid from them.

In J a n u a r y I went to Paris for a few days and paid another brief visit to London. Life was pulling at me again and news reached me, in London, that I had been elected for a second time president of the Indian National Congress, which was to meet in April. I had been expecting this as friends h a d forewarned me, and I h a d even discussed it with K a m a l a . It was a dilemma for m e : to leave her as she was or to resign from the presidentship. She would not have me resign. She was just a little better and we thought that I could come back to her later.

At the end of J a n u a r y , 1936, K a m a l a left Badenweiler and was taken to a sanatorium near Lausanne in Switzerland.

D e a t h

Both Kamala and I liked the change to Switzerland. She was more cheerful and I felt a little more at home in that part of