Boss Lady

Fashion designer, beauty brand owner, actor—Masaba Gupta is the reigning queen in every field

Q. How is life after marriage?
I think life changes after your first marriage, never after your second (laughs). Honestly, it changes as much as you want it to. We are both working professionals; he knows my work is my first spouse. It's just that you have to become more cautious about how you manage your time. I sometimes forget that, but I am trying to maintain a work-life balance now.

Q. The beauty industry is crowded with brands. What differentiates LoveChild Masaba from the rest?
There are very few things that differentiate a brand operating in this space. The promise of LoveChild is to cater to Indian skin tones. These are high-performing hybrid products that are a mix of skincare and colour cosmetics. LoveChild also caters to young teenage girls who have just started wearing make-up, which is why we have a very competitive price point.

Q. Tell us about your beauty routine.
When it comes to skincare, less is more. Icing my face every morning has become a ritual. It's the best tip for anyone who has large pores and textured skin. Also, I can't deny the power of a good sunscreen coupled with a basic moisturiser suited for a humid climate. Apart from this, I try to have at least two-three litres of water every day and cut down on caffeine. And, of course, there's nothing like a workout to get that glow!

Q. You've been vocal about your PCOS journey. Is there any advice you have for those battling it?
It's never a one-size-fits-all approach. Emotional triggers need to be looked at first. We really underestimate the mind-body connection or what stress can do. Stress management, breathwork and a lot of physical movement worked for me. Nutrition is another important piece. I remember my gynaecologist telling me to drop 10 kg when I was overweight.
