THE GLOBAL VILLAGER

In his humble check shirt and traditional cotton veshti, Sridhar Vembu looks quite unlike the average CEO. Not just in his appearance but also in the choices he has made for Zoho Corporation, the cloud-based business software major he co-founded and helms, Vembu has been singularly unconventional. In November 2019, he moved to Mathalamparai village in the picturesque Western Ghats in Tamil Nadu's Tenkasi district.

Flaunting his office built out of mud, limestone and straw and covered with thatched palm leaves, he says, "It doesn't get hot here, even in summer." He is working towards setting up 30 such offices in villages across the country. "These rural offices are crucial for
