to teaching and training," says Dwivedi. Several IIMC alumni are established names in the industry and often visit the campus as guest faculty. The institute has over 80 professionals as guest faculty. "So it's not just that only the regular faculty members are teaching. Professionals involved in the industry provide hands-on training to students. A photographer will teach photography, a TV anchor will showcase the nuances of screen presence and speaking to the camera," says Prof. Dwivedi.

The curriculum of IIMC, unlike in other institutions, focuses more on practical training. By the time they graduate, students get a 360-degree training on working on the field. Every course is designed in such a way that a student can venture out to all sorts of media—print, TV or digital. Because of their regular interactions with industry heavyweights, IIMC stu-
