"I graduated from NIFT, New Delhi, in 2000 and was also on the board of NIFT in 2018-19. The college has shaped my approach to fashion in more ways than one. But what makes it stand out is the equal focus on academics and application"

ANAVILA MISRA, Fashion designer, Batch of 2000

(DFCCIL) employees, working with the Sports Authority of India (SAI) to recreate the standard uniform for Indian athletes participating in major international events, and collaborating with the brand Monsoon, UK, to develop designs for their 50-year anniversary. The campus also houses the Centre of Excellence for Khadi (CoEK), a project sanctioned by the Ministry of micro, small & medium enterprises.

A number of students and faculty members from the institute have helmed inventions ranging from smart wearables, such as a 'self-defence' jacket for women that gives a low-voltage electric shock to an attacker—which was granted a patent last year—to more technical machine innovations like a needle replacement system or a single piece flat spring pressure foot system for sewing machines. The institute has also been up to speed when it comes to new and emerging technologies, expeditiously adopting artificial intelligence (AI) and mechatronics, augmented reality (AR), virtual experience design, smart textiles/wearables, and big data and business analytics as part of its academic framework.
