work (NIRF) rankings was its research output which, Krishnaswamy says, is "very closely linked to the kind of faculty we have been recruiting".

Academics saw two significant initiatives last year—the university brought in structured externships in which students get to work in law firms or civil society organisations during the course of the term; and it started 5-8 courses relating to emerging technologies such as artificial intelligence regulation and ethics, blockchain and crypto.

Meanwhile, the university has begun a process of professionalising the placements process to widen the range of choices across litigation, corporate law practice and the civil society sector. "Today, most students focus on a corporate law firm job. We don't weigh in on that... our role, as a university, is to widen the range of choices," says Krishnaswamy. On the infrastructure front, the inhouse Sri Narayan Rao Melgiri Memorial National Law Library, funded by a grant from philanthropist Sudha Murty, has been entirely digitised and its seating capacity doubled. "This, to my mind, makes us one of the biggest and best academic libraries in the country today," says Krishnaswamy. The project also spurred a
